HONOURS RESEARCH

Research Focus:

Sabrina's honours research, "Past Action, Current Challenges, and Future Initiatives – An Investigation into the Hurdles for Achieving Gender Equity in Nova Scotia" is a case study based on the impact of a November 2017 gender equity meeting in Nova Scotia reporting on the individual experiences of both organizers and participants. Despite it being collectively agreed that gender gaps have narrowed in general, there are still inequitable differences prevalent in society – specifically in sport. In Canada today, there are still 84% of adult females who do not take part in sport.

About Sabrina:

Sabrina Nunn is a 4th year Kinesiology student from French River, PEI and is in the Sports Injury Assessment Management (S.I.A.M.) program, serving as the student therapist with women's hockey and men's basketball. While at Acadia, Sabrina has been busy volunteering with SMILE and the Best Buddy's program. She has also been involved with the Acadia women's club rugby team, serving as the club president.

From growing up in sport and being inspired in Ann Dodge's Ethics class, gender equity has always been a passion of Sabrina's. Throughout her honours, she has been able to delve into discussions with people who are directly involved in the sport sector. This study aspires to voice the participants' direct experiences to ascertain conclusions on specific areas where improvement can be made and actions that can be taken to effect positive change in relation to the female experience in the world of sport.
